

Organized Solutions

Website Feedback - Proposed Next Steps for Confirmation

Goal of the next pass

Keep the mature visual direction, art, imagery, parallax and partnership positioning - while making the business value and problem-solving role clearer immediately.

1. Refine the opening message

The homepage should still lead with respect and partnership, but it needs to make Organized Solutions' problem-solving value obvious sooner. We will revise the hero so a prospective client quickly understands the kinds of operational challenges Organized Solutions helps solve - without suggesting that the client or their business is deficient. The intended balance is: you have built something valuable + growth creates operational challenges + we can partner with you to solve them and elevate the operation. The current hero line, "Operational leadership for what you've already built," will be reconsidered rather than treated as final.

2. Remove the requested phrase

Delete the wording "equal to what they have already built" from the early fractional-COO explanation and smooth the surrounding sentence so it reads naturally.

3. Establish one consistent assessment-first tagline

Replace the medical-sounding "We diagnose before we prescribe" language. The leading direction is "We assess before we recommend." Once confirmed, the same exact phrase will be used consistently wherever this idea appears. Because this may also become future advertising language, we will treat it as a brand line rather than casually varying it from section to section.

4. Explain why the operational-challenges section matters

The "Growth creates operational questions even in capable organizations" section already lists recognizable situations such as growth outpacing structure, unclear responsibilities, reactive leadership, dependence on a few people, work falling through the cracks, and systems no longer scaling. We will add a concise bridge that tells the visitor why these signals are relevant and where Organized Solutions fits. The purpose is recognition, not criticism: these are normal signs that additional operational leadership may help a successful organization move forward.

5. Make tier choice and customization unmistakable

Clarify before the engagement tiers that clients are not being pushed through a fixed package sequence. They can choose the level of support that fits their current needs, and the work inside the selected tier is customized to their organization, industry, size and goals. The four approved levels remain Assessment; Assessment + Recommendation; Assessment + Recommendation + Implementation; and Ongoing Advisory.

6. Replace the word 'intimate'

In the "Discretion" value, replace "Operational work is intimate" with language that communicates sensitivity, trust and confidentiality without using the word "intimate." We will preserve the meaning that operational work can involve private internal information and should be handled with discretion.

7. Update the FAQ to include Tier 4

The answer to "How do I know which tier I need?" will explicitly include Tier 4 / Ongoing Advisory. The answer should make the progression clear: clarity through Assessment; roadmap through Recommendation; hands-on execution through Implementation; and continued fractional COO support through Ongoing Advisory. It should also reinforce that Organized Solutions will help determine the right fit.

8. Keep the partnership message throughout

The feedback confirms that partnership is a strength of the current site. We will preserve it. Organized Solutions should come across as an experienced operational partner that can work alongside the client's team or take substantial ownership of the work when the engagement calls for it. We will not soften the site so much that the company's role as a chief problem solver disappears.

9. Preserve the mature visual identity and interactive work

No new visual redesign is proposed. Keep the selected charcoal / warm off-white / stone / navy-charcoal / slate / champagne / muted-gold palette, with gold used sparingly. Keep the relevant photography, alignment art, measure marks, continuing-path concept, masks, section transitions, animation and parallax. As copy is adjusted, art will be checked again to ensure it supports the actual business message rather than functioning as decoration.

10. Logo direction

Continue with the new Organized Solutions alignment-mark logo direction, but without "Fractional COO" in the permanent logo. This keeps the identity broader and allows the company to grow without locking the master brand to one service descriptor. "Fractional COO" can still be used in website copy and service positioning where appropriate.

What will NOT change in this pass

The overall information architecture, GitHub Pages hosting, four-tier business model, approved tagline "Sustainable systems. Real results.", relevant art/parallax foundation, and the broader partnership direction will remain intact. This is a targeted owner-feedback correction pass, not another restart.

Confirmation requested

Please confirm that this captures the intended direction. After confirmation, these points will be translated into one focused implementation pass rather than another broad redesign.
